Presidents Message...Steve Peirce

February was a fun month for the Club. We held a Board Meeting, 1st Monthly Luncheon for the year, Ice Fishing in Ely and a Pellet Gun shooting event. With the weather warming up and people ready to get out, there should be plenty of opportunities for fun.

Make your arrangements for the Banquet (April 30) and we are looking for additional donations (gear, hunting events or items for ladies).

Thanks for your participation and we have two fun events in March (22 Pistol Shoot 3/12 and Sunnyside Fishing 3/19).

Have fun and make some stories to tell.

Steve Pierce President 2022

"All we want to do is hunt and fish and talk about it.

SPORTSMAN of the Year Nominations. Chairman Ken Johnson 221-9116 or 858-8551 is requesting nominations for SOTY. Nominations close on April 1, 2022 the selection committee will be reviewing the nominations and secret ballot of those nominations will determine the winner of our 30th Anniversary Sportsman of the Year. A few nominations have already been submitted, this is our clubs highest honor and can be won only once. A short list of members have earned the SOTY award. Please contact Ken with your nominations.

LVWW Banquet: The date is set for April 30th at the Gold Coast Hotel & Casino. This will be a celebration of 30 years for the club. We had to cancel last year so want a BIG PARTY this year. The banquet is our ONLY fund raiser for the year. We need volunteers to help out. Chairman Mike Reese has started early (we currently have about 16 guns purchased and in our possession) we desperately need more donation items. Mark Transue 219-3716 is in charge of collecting donations so if you have something or have a lead on a donation contact Mark. Donations can be ANYTHING. Dinner vouchers, show tickets, sporting event tickets, outdoor gear, hunts, small items of all sorts, think outside the box things like an oil change at the local lube shop, tires, gunsmithing, clothing, airline tickets, sports memorabilia etc. Costs have increased so currently the dinner tickets are set at $75 for adults pre-sale and $100 at the door and $45 for kids. See the ticket sales flyer, to submit your request early.

Ely Ice Fishing recap

Once again the hearty crew of hard water fishermen and women descended on Comins Lake just south of Ely for some ice fishing. The weather was post card perfect, sure a bit cold in the early morning somewhere in the teens to low 20's but it warmed up nicely later in the day.....the temperature warmed up, not the fish catching. I'm jumping ahead a bit.

We scheduled the event to coincide with the Ely Rotary Ice Fishing Derby with the chance to catch a tagged fish for $100 and a top prize of $5000. We have always gathered at the north end of the south lake but the "derby" promotion said all the tagged fish were released in the north lake. Honcho Brian Patterson called an audible early Saturday morning to meet at the south end of the north lake rather than our usual location on the south lake. This would allow all that entered to potentially catch a tagged fish. The scout Troop 130 set up camp on shore making breakfast while the main LVWW group of roughly 20-25 anglers started drilling holes. The honcho quickly landed a fish at roughly 7:30am, 30 minutes PRIOR to the official start of the contest. Did not count.

Our group of 20 anglers each with 1-2 rods set up only managed to catch ONE fish from 8am – 3pm. Member Aaron Forgey (picture above) was the only "official" catch for that part of the lake ALL DAY. There were lots and lots of anglers around us and none of them were catching fish either. A few from the group Nick Gulli and Steve Junge posted up in our original location on the south lake and managed to land a "few" fish during the day. About mid-day Steve Pierce relocated to the south lake and landed two fish himself. I think the final tally was roughly 10-11 fish caught by the LVWW group of some 20-25 anglers and those fish were caught by only 4-5 different guys. Top fisherman was Steve Junge with six fish.

The whole day was not a complete bust, we still had a fun time even though the fish didn't cooperate much. The scouts not only made breakfast but they also provided pulled pork sliders for lunch to the fishermen on the ice! There was grumbling all over the ice that very few fish were caught with an estimated 600-650 fisherman out for the day. A rumor said only one tagged fish was caught and later I confirmed reading the Ely Times Newspaper in fact only 1 fish was caught netting the angler Christian Kolberg a prize of $5000!!!

The Easter Bunny

Wayne Kirch WMA (aka:Sunnyside) Saturday March 19 8am-1pm Haymeadow Res

Be sure to join us for the annual Sunnyside "Ice Off" at the Kirch Wildlife Area. On Saturday morning we'll meet up at 8am at the improved Haymeadow boat ramp to start the fishing event, (boats with small motors are allowed). Due to heavy reed/cattail growth shore access is limited to the dams at all the lakes at Sunnyside so a small boat, canoe or float tube is best. Haymeadow Reservoir is not restricted on bait choices per NDOW regulations. This will be an Angler of the Year event and scoring will be simple, most fish caught, using the honor system. Don't forget your fishing license! See honcho with fish from a past years event...a nice fat rainbow caught right at the boat ramp.

After a quick lunch back at the boat dock 1pm, some of us will be packing up and heading back to Vegas, some may want to try the other reservoirs. This can be a one day excursion for those willing to drive up and back on the same day.

Sunnyside is 175 miles north of town (3 hrs). (there are 5 reservoirs at Sunnyside, all contain trout and bass) Haymeadow is the farthest south reservoir. A small group may be heading up with trailers/tents on Friday the 18th to stay at the campground (bring your own water as I don't think the campground will be fully operational this early in the season).

See map for location of fishing event at Haymeadow Res located within the Wayne Kirch Wildlife Management Area also known as Sunnyside.

Easy directions: north from LV on I-15 approx 20 miles to Hwy 93 (the junction has a Love's truckstop) north on Hwy 93 roughly 80 miles just past Ash Springs (last stop for gas) to Hwy 318. North on Hwy 318 roughly 70 miles to the turn off. Turn left (west) on dirt road roughly 6-8 miles to the lakes. There is a brown BLM sign on 318 pointing the direction to the water. If you get to the town of Lund you went too far 😊. 2.5-3hrs drive time, so you can leave early in the morning if you wish.

Historically we try to set this close to the ice off as the fishing is generally pretty fast and furious, I recall one year with three of us on the boat all landing over 100 fish each for the day. BUT, there have been some slow days as well. 4770 9" fish were stocked in October, they should be 12-14 inches now. Spring weather is unpredictable, warm and sunny to COLD and windy. Come prepared for anything weatherwise. Check the reports just prior to the event.

Shore fishing is limited to the dam area, it is best to have access to a small boat or kayak or float tube. We will be launching from the boat dock at 8am and check in back at the boat dock at 1pm. Coordinate with honcho Brian Patterson 715-2020 to car pool for the ride up or find a buddy with an open seat on a boat to make your day more successful.

Services are limited so bring everything you will need for the day/weekend.

WHAT'S THE FUTURE OF TRAIL CAMERAS IN THE WEST? BY Travis Hall

MeatEater

Big changes are on the horizon for trail camera use in the state of Utah, following similar, recent bans in Arizona and Nevada. In an early January decision that divided the state's hunting community, the Utah Wildlife Board voted to prohibit the use of all trail cameras during fall big game seasons.

Utah's new regulations, which extend to both private and public land from July 31 to Dec. 31, came on the heels of a long-running and contentious debate about the ethics of remote photography in the Beehive State and other parts of the West. Trail cameras are not being questioned as widely in other regions of the country.

Board members arrived at the 4-3 decision after a survey issued by the Utah Department of Wildlife Resources polled thousands of Utah license holders. Among other topics, it asked respondents to indicate support for or opposition to rule changes that would prohibit trail cameras during a specific time of year.

One section of the survey asked hunters if they would support a trail camera rule similar to the one already in place in Nevada. Nevada prohibits the use of trail cameras on public land (the state is nearly 90% public) from Aug. 1 to Dec. 31 of each year.

"In the survey, 49.6% supported implementing Nevada-style regs, 10% percent said they didn't care, and the balance of 39.5% was opposed," Utah State Representative Casey Snider told MeatEater.

Snider was the lead sponsor of HB 295, which passed the Utah State Legislature in the spring of 2021. That bill required the Utah Wildlife Board to make changes around trail camera use and regulations. It also banned baiting for big game.

According to Snider, Utah's desert landscape and arid climate create a somewhat unique situation that makes trail camera use problematic.

"I'm in a limited-entry unit where I live," he said. "There's hardly a wallow or a spring that doesn't have at least one camera on it, and the ones that are more well known have piles of cameras."

A lifelong hunter who also led a recent charge to establish a constitutional right to hunt and fish in Utah, Snider is outspoken about his belief that trail cameras have gotten out of hand in his home state. In a landscape with finite water sources, there seems to be several cameras trained on every spring and guzzler—with people going in and out to check them regularly.

He says that while trail cameras have been a divisive and uncomfortable issue, most of the opposition to new regulations is coming from the state's guiding and outfitting community.

"The regular Joe is upset, but not the majority of regular people," Snider said. "The ones that are super wound up are the folks who think this is going to impact their bottom line. I just don't have sympathy for that. I think this is the public's wildlife."

Snider believes that certain guides and outfitters in Utah may be violating fair chase ethics with their exorbitant trail camera tactics.

"You've got individuals, largely in the guiding and outfitting community, that are running hundreds of cameras or purchasing images on thousands of cameras," he said. "They literally have the ability to say, here's the animal, we know where he's gonna be, so we put the guy in place and we pull the trigger. Those are the bad actors who have created this entire conflict."

Not Alone Other arid states in the desert Southwest have faced similar challenges. The Arizona Game and Fish Commission voted unanimously to approve a year-round prohibition on trail cameras in July 2021, while Nevada implemented its seasonal regulations back in 2018. As Snider alludes, the Nevada regulations closely guided the rules now in place in Utah.

Utah's new regulations also ban the use of night vision devices that employ thermal imaging and infrared technology for hunting.

"The technology for that stuff is out there right now, and I believe that it's at a price point where it's almost affordable," Snider said. "Some of that infrared stuff makes cameras look like nothing because you can look at a hillside through thermal imaging and see through cover. I mean, the deer and elk are not al Qaeda. Let's give 'em a chance."

Pros and Cons MeatEater's Director of Conservation Ryan Callaghan says that recent efforts to regulate trail cameras in Utah and other Western states present a tricky conundrum.

"I think there's some very clear, beneficial uses to trail cameras," Cal said. "I think there's a really strong argument to be made that it's a great way to get the kids and the whole family outside and invested in the outdoors."

He points out that state wildlife agencies also benefit from trail camera technology.

"There's a huge benefit to state agencies, even when that comes from the citizen science side of things," Cal said. "There's been a lot of trail cam data in the last 10 years that individuals have reached out with, whether it's documenting how far juvenile mountain lions are traveling or these young male wolves are traveling, and that's just from a citizen science standpoint. The ability of our wildlife agencies to set up a remote camera trap at relatively low cost is huge, and those are all extreme positives."

The Utah trail camera ban exempts government agencies and educational organizations but does not have a carve out for the type of citizen science that Cal is referring to.

From a hunting standpoint, however, Cal says he is not opposed to the new rules in Utah.

"My personal take on trail cameras is it wouldn't bother me in the slightest if they went away," he said. "I'm not going to go to bat for trail cameras. It's a weird deal. I don't use them. I'm never in a spot where I'm like, 'If only I could get a dozen trail cameras out here.'"

For Cal, another ethical concern is the practice of guides, outfitters, or professional scouts selling or marketing photos of an individual animal to prospective clients.

In Utah, it was once possible to purchase images and location data for a particular trophy-class animal on the internet. Such time-sensitive information about an individual animal's characteristics and whereabouts gives hunters with enough disposable cash an unfair advantage, Cal said.

"There's this very real monetization of wildlife where guides and outfitters can sell images or data pertaining to an individual animal," he said. "They'd say that they're selling the opportunity to harvest that animal, not the animal itself. But we know that the general public, which is not deep into the world of trophy hunting, doesn't find that palatable."

The new rules in Utah prohibit "the sale or purchase of trail camera footage or data to take or aid in the take of big game."

Some Utah hunters who oppose the state's new trail camera rule worry that it could lead down a slippery slope toward future bans on critical hunting technology.

Casey Butler is a founder of HUSH, a Utah-based hunting lifestyle brand and media company. In a recent episode of the HUSHLIFE Podcast, Butler voiced concerns about the impending trail camera ban.

"I think what gets a lot of guys scared anytime anything gets taken away is what's next? Ninety nine point nine percent of the animals I've killed are because of these right here," he said, holding up a pair of binoculars. "This is technology that has taken us to a new place. Are optics next? Why are optics any different than a trail camera?"

The Future of Trail Cam Technology in the West Utah, Arizona, and Nevada aren't alone in implementing recent changes to trail camera regulations, but other bans target "live-action" or "transmitting" cameras only. These cameras provide users with real-time photos of anything that triggers their motion sensors, often sending images directly to the user's smartphone.

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks recently walked back a seasonal prohibition of all trail cameras in favor of a rule that bans "cameras or video devices capable of transmitting real-time information, pictures or videos." Colorado Parks & Wildlife "prohibits the use of trail cameras that use the internet or other computer-assisted remote technology while hunting or fishing." In 2018, the Wyoming Game and Fish Commission addressed the issue as well, recommending a ban on "real-time trail cameras" from Aug. 1 to Dec. 31.

In New Mexico, transmitting cameras were banned statewide in November of 2018, but more traditional trail cameras that require hunters to physically remove a memory card in order to retrieve photo data remain legal.

Jesse Duebel, executive director of the New Mexico Wildlife Federation, says that while New Mexico has a similarly arid climate, the state has not seen the same type of camera proliferation around critical water sources that's so often cited by hunters in Utah and Arizona.

"We're an arid state and you'd think you would go to a water hole and see 15 to 20 cameras, but that just doesn't seem to be the case," Duebel told MeatEater. "I wouldn't doubt that that controversy gets to New Mexico at some point in the future, but it's not currently being discussed very much."

It remains to be seen whether the trend toward regulating trail cameras in the West will continue or end with the recent rule changes in Utah, but some people speculate that drought and rapidly growing numbers of hunters afield may only serve to exacerbate the problems that cameras sometimes create. Remote photography is not as widely debated in the East, South, and Midwest, where tags come over the counter, water is plentiful, and private lands dominate most landscapes.

For his part, Rep. Snider says he doesn't like to see infighting within the hunting community. But he stands behind his proposals, despite the divisiveness they've generated.

"I don't like hunter-on-hunter conflict," he said. "But I fundamentally believe that we have to do something here. I think that the wildlife that we all use in whatever way deserves that level of dignity."

LVWW TRAP TEAM – FIRST PLACE

This announcement should have been front page news, the Winter League recently wrapped up and look who ended up in FIRST PLACE. LVWW has sponsored a trap team for 20-25 years shooting four leagues a year (every Wednesday night, non-stop), that's 80-100 league opportunities to hone our skills. This is just the second time we have won first place! The other time, just 2 years ago, we must be getting better with age.....after all these years! Congratulations!

Pellet, BB gun and Poker Results

Another great time was had by the 25 who came out for the event.

Among the 25 who came 7 were youth. "Fathers and sons, Grandfathers and just friends." The weather was cool but enjoyable, mild wind. The competition was close. Steve Junge had the dead eye and took the overall win earning himself $70. The other top shooters were as follows: Tony Perkins, Carson Dudzinski (Youth) and Steve Peirce. As for the Lewis class winner: John Mitteness, Jeff Bryant, Nick Gulli and Rodger Palmer.

Each shooter was dealt 2 cards after shooting each gun and a single card when turning in their targets.

The five cards were used for a high poker hand. Can you believe out of 25 shooters three 4s were the winning hand? Nick Marchesi (youth) won a Daisy Red Rider BB gun. The cards were then added up for high score "5 cards 21" Ralph Willits took home a Nerf gun. Next the low hand won a Nerf gun also, "John Girard". And just for fun, low card won a sucker which was a tie so two suckers went home.

Thanks for all the Jr honchos who helped put this on.
